As Pope Benedict announced his resignation last week, the papal representative in Washington called the American episcopal church to address "the serious issues of abuse and accountability in the church.

The Catholic Church in the United States is facing a crisis of confidence as a result of the sex abuse scandal. The Pope's resignation has raised questions about the future of the church and its ability to address these issues.

The Pope's resignation comes amidst a growing scandal involving sexual abuse and cover-up within the church. The scandal has led to a loss of trust in the church and has raised questions about the future of the church.

The Pope's decision to resign has been seen as a sign of the church's efforts to address the crisis. The church has been faced with widespread criticism for its handling of the scandal, and the Pope's resignation is seen as a step towards addressing these issues.

The Pope's resignation has also raised questions about the future of the church. The election of a new Pope will be an important moment in the church's history, and the new Pope will have to address the crisis of confidence and work to rebuild trust in the church.

The Pope's resignation is a moment of reflection for the church, and it is hoped that the new Pope will be able to address the crisis and lead the church towards a brighter future.

The Pope's resignation is a moment of hope for those who have been seeking change within the church. The new Pope will have a significant role to play in addressing the crisis and rebuilding trust in the church.